

Another, Nicole is also in the news but I doubt if she'll like it.

Nicole Kidman has hit the headlines after turning up at a sporting event with husband Keith Urban in Nashville looking a little scruffy. Despite only turning 39, Nicole is sporting some seriously geriatric hair. According to Jezebel, many people miss Nicole's ridiculously untamable red locks - but that sad truth is her hair has gone completely grey.

Completely grey hair is a bitch apparently. Since the hair lacks pigment, it doesn't hold color as well - which is why, we're told, many ladies like Nicole just go blonde. The texture of grey hair can be very coarse and wiry, which explains the drastic frizz farm Nicole has cultivated on her scalp.

But what is Nicole to do? Grey, curly, coarse hair is enough to make anyone just shave their head and give up. But at least she's still trying. Personally I like it!

I'm grateful to mrpaparazzi.com for the next snippet. Kelly Brook, who is currently staring as Jeannie in the West End show 'Fat Pig' has been criticised by some, including Esther Walker who writes:

"Jeannie is a terrible, humourless wretch. When she discovers that former lover Tom has spurned her for an obese librarian, Helen, Jeannie expresses her disappointment by shrieking, going red in the face and saying bitter, resentful and angry things. To make her sympathetic would test the experience and range of Dame Judi Dench, let alone Kelly Brook. And I'm not sure that Brook, as we know her, is wise to play, even ironically, the sort of woman that we suspect she might actually sort of be: celebrated almost exclusively for her looks and, perhaps (you never know) a tiny bit shrill?... Meeow!

At the other end of the scale is Guy Ritchie - What a nice bloke(?). According to reports on getlippy.com, Guy will not be taking a single penny from Madonna's estimated 300 million pound bank stash despite being entitled to up to half of it. It seems as though the split has been dealt with rather amicably and the kids will be spending half their time with dad in the UK and half with Madge in the States where she has recently settled.

Another split that's in danger of being not quite as friendly is that between Michael Jackson and his (ex) mate Prince Abdulla bin Khalifa. The skint superstar, says The Sun, has changed his name to Mikaeel and become a Muslim just days before he's due to appear at the High Court in London where the son of the Bahraini King is claiming that Jacko owes him almost 5 million quid. Jacko's defence it appears, is that he thought the cash amounts were gifts!... Tsk, Tsk, With such paltry sums involved what's the betting the boys just kiss and make up?

Also from The Sun we learn that Ronaldo is a "malicious bigmouth" according to Real Madrid ace Marcelo. The Manchester United idol was accused of trying to break Tiago Silva's leg as Portugal crashed 6-2 in Brasilia earlier in the month.

Ronaldo, says his agent, is waiting for talks with Manchester United after asking for about 175,000 pounds a week to stay at the club.

Reuters posted the final of our snippets on Sunday 16 Nov - You knew Ricky Gervais was a genius at writing comedy ("The Office") and a superb comic actor ("Extras"), but did you know he can do stand-up with the best of them? His new HBO special "Ricky Gervais: Out of England," which debuted Saturday, makes the case loud and clear.

His humor doesn't lend itself to easy categorization, though nearly all of it is well-paced, well-aimed and well-delivered. At times, he offers clever observations. Then he slips effortlessly into self-deprecation, political incorrectness and convoluted examinations of nursery rhymes. He works in a black T-shirt on a mostly empty stage with no props and just a giant can of beer to stay lubricated.

And he's fearless. Not since Lenny Bruce has a comedian managed to get laughs with a comic take on the motivation of Adolf Hitler, but Gervais does it, makes his points and moves on. The origin of AIDS, alternatives to anal sex, favorite wars — it's all fair game and unfailingly funny.

A lot of entertainers do charity work, but Gervais mines it for several sick jokes, all delivered with an impish smile that rules out any trace of meanness. The production, taped in New York, offers additional proof that Gervais is that rare British talent able to charm audiences consistently on either side of the pond.
