

Kit & The Widow

If you need to ask what these pictures are all about, then I'm sorry, but I have no chance whatsoever of telling you. These little moments of peculiar irreverence are obviously 'top-shelf' material for the discerning adult reader only and possibly only relevant to the 500 or so people who gathered once again in the residence gardens to be entertained and occasionally, for some - humiliated.

The return of Kit & The Widow was engineered by Jan, Ian, Owain and Padraig in the form of the Wadi Nights committee along with the specific and essential sponsorship of BAE Systems and bmi.

In their own words, Kit and the Widow are simply two men and a piano who deliver the gentle art of cabaret revue ranging from the apallingly intimate to the long-range indiscriminate.

No one in the audience was safe from the ribaldry and if you were too tight to flash the cash to see them on the night, I'm not going to spoil the fun in case they appear again.

The entertainment ranged from songs fashioned from the local gossip, (just where do they get to hear it all?) to rather more classical numbers delivered with a unique bathos or grandiloquence.

The only downside to the entire proceedings was that so many patrons wanted copies of their latest CD, that they ran out of copies. Fear not though - help is at hand - See below for details of how to order your very own copy.

Being one of those fortunates who actually procured a CD on the night, I can personally assure you that obtaining your own will be more than worth it.

If you have a day or two to spare you can check out www.kitandthewidow.com for an assortment of obscure directions, Alternatively the latest double CD attractively priced at £20 plus p & p. can be ordered directly from several websites including:

www.classicalrecording.co.uk or www.dresscircle.co.uk

